ABSTRACT

Sukuk as a major Islamic finance instrument grew rapidly in recent years. However, the management of Sukuk and its growth was marked by major challenges and obstacles. This research analyzed the major challenges, such as legal matters, Shariah issues and risk management aspects. The western laws in many countries where Islamic financial institutions exists, has hindered the progress of Sukuk and necessitated a viable solution. The various Islamic schools of thought and the opinions of current scholars who issue conflicting Shariah rulings in many instances contributed to a Shariah challenge that faced the Sukuk markets. The research also studied the various underlying risks which surround the Sukuk markets. These underlying risks include market risk, interest rate risk, foreign exchange risk, credit and counterparty risk and Shariah compliance risk.

Hedging is a crucial aspect in a financial market. The importance of hedging in managing risks pertinent to Sukuk and the various measures adopted by Islamic banks and corporate to minimize their risk exposure was analyzed. The research discussed the use of swap as a hedging mechanism. The development of a Shariah-compliant derivatives market, allowed using swap to mitigate the risk exposures from Sukuk structure. Along with the development of Shariah-compliant, the study discussed some of derivatives such as foreign exchange swaps, profit rate swaps and cross- currency swaps.
